Sona sings for real freedom

We might be completing 73 years of Independence, but the freedom to move around is still restricted for women in several parts of India. Singer Sona Mohapatra's latest song, Raat ke musafir, composed by Nitin Krishna Menon, is a reminder of the struggles that Indian women face daily, including their commute and work life. The video, featuring actors Sakshi Hasija as a cab driver who aspires to be a civil servant, and Anupama Sunehria, a hockey player, goes live today. "Our police haven't been sensitised to understand gender equality as part of their basic duty. One can pass all the laws in the world, but the implementation needs to be improved. This song captures the aspirations of young Indian women who aim to make their mark in the world and expect equal rights," shared Mohapatra.
